Going Industrial

Clean X-treme is experiencing an increasing number of calls from industries. Heavy equipment and sharp edged surfaces contribute to many injuries, loss of limbs, and fatalities.

While the manufacturing industry is committed to handling such incidents with prompt emergency medical care, they are also committed to following OSHA guidelines and procedures. It is imperative that each incident is thoroughly processed, cleaned and sanitized by a competent company.

Over the past eleven years, Clean X-treme has performed numerous clean-ups in the manufacturing industry. Our biohazard technicians handle each incident in a professional manner while maintaining confidentiality.

Rest assured, Clean X-treme has the knowledge and experience to handle each clean-up efficiently.

Our Services are Covered by Most Homeowners Insurance

Clean X-treme works with all major homeowners insurance carriers and our services are covered by most homeowners policies.

Prior to starting a clean-up, we always make an attempt to get a claim number. We take pre clean-up and post clean-up pictures for proper documentation. If adjusters do not or cannot make the scene, we keep copies of all pictures for their use.

All Clean X-treme clean-ups are completely documented; we itemize right down to the rubber gloves. Our records are provided to the insurance companies and are also kept by Clean X-treme. The homeowner is responsible for the deductible portion of the insurance. We accept most credit cards for this deductible.

Please feel free to call us regarding our services covered, policies, or documentation processes.

CLEAN X-TREME

The Biohazard Control and Clean-up Company

Unique Clean-Up

Clean X-treme responded to a unique clean-up at an industrial plant this past January. The plant manufactures a magnetic powder-like substance. Workers feed pellet sized pieces of material through a four-stage auger process where it is ground down to a dust-like consistency.

During production, one of the employees got caught in the first-stage auger. He lost his arm at the shoulder. With the immediate medical treatment the facility was able to provide, his life was saved.

Clean X-treme was called in to clean and sanitize the machinery. Due to the extreme nature of the incident, this was a very unique clean-up. The magnetic dust-like substance covered everything making this job very tedious. Six Clean X-treme biohazard technicians worked through the night to complete the job so that plant operations could continue.
